Pilate had good reason to worry about a so-called “King of the Jews.” As the Roman prefect in charge of the province of Judea, he would logically be threatened by the native population’s king. Imagine his relief when Jesus tells him that he has no attendants to fight, for his kingdom “does not belong to this world”. To Pilate, a king had power, status, and wealth. The man before him had none of those things. But he did not recognize the truth, the truth that indeed Jesus had all of those things, just in a different way. In God’s kingdom, Jesus was given power over death, the status of kingship, and the wealth of the countless souls who have joined him in eternal life.

A few Sundays ago we heard Jesus tell his disciples, “Whoever wishes to be great among you will be your servant; whoever wishes to be first among you will be the slave of all. For the Son of Man did not come to be served but to serve and to give his life as a ransom for many”. This is the model of kingship that Jesus embraced. Jesus wished for his disciples to serve others, to want to serve others, and to live their lives in service of others, rejecting the very human values of ambition and vanity. Jesus humbled himself just to become human, further humbled himself to live his life serving others, and ultimately humbled himself by dying on the cross. This is the self-sacrifice he calls his disciples to accept.

Not only did Jesus redefine king for us, but he also redefined kingdom. Just as the king is the servant of all, the kingdom is one in which service for others is paramount. For this, as is written in Revelation, Jesus “has made us into a kingdom”. The kingdom is not only beyond this world but is also present in this world when Jesus is present with us. Jesus embodied the kingdom during his earthly life and before he left, he told his disciples that he would always be present in those who are most in need. When we serve those in need, spreading Christ’s peace, hope, and love in the world, we are participating in the work of the kingdom. Have I felt the presence of the kingdom when I have been of service? How can I be of service this week to someone in need?
